WOLSZTYN

Wolsztyn is a small neat beautifully flowered town, located between two lakes and surrounded by forests. It has a rich history; there are museums honouring a Nobel laureate and a Wielkopolska famous sculptor. One will find here operating steam engines, animals in a rural farm in the Heritage Park, two parks, and nature trails. It is also worth seeing palace and park complexes in the area. All this creates perfect conditions for relaxation.

If you want to find a tourist attractive town without crowds of tourists or urban noise, with accessible recreation areas and friendly people, choose Wolsztyn. This is the right place for you. Every visitor will find something satisfactory. They will rest, regenerate themselves and certainly will not feel bored.

FOR CHILDREN

The youngest tourists will probably be delighted to see a real steam engine just as it is pictured in Julian Tuwim's most famous poem "big and heavy, made of iron and steel."

For the first meeting you can choose an exhibit in the Steam Locomotive Shed which is not hot iron, hissing or whistling by surprise. You can also visit the roundhouse "garage", which holds 8 iron machines, and additionally enter a historic passenger carriage from the beginning of the 20th century or see a water crane delivering water into the tank of a steam locomotive.

Another children friendly place is the West Wielkopolska Folk Buildings Heritage Park - a huge fenced green area which holds old wooden houses transferred from Wielkopolska villages. Children will be able to see here farm animals such as goats, sheep and rabbits. They will have a great fun tracking down a cat or finding a dove-cote.

FOR YOUNG PEOPLE

School children may be more interested in prominent scholars related to Wolsztyn. It is worth visiting the Nobel Laureate's house - Robert Koch, the founder of modern bacteriology and the discoverer of Mycobacterium tuberculosis. For inquisitive minds there is an opportunity to work with a microscope.

Art lovers should visit Marcin Rożek Museum devoted to a famous painter and sculptor, the author of a monumental statue of Bolesław I the Brave in Gniezno. The museum is situated in the artist's house built by his idea.

Walking round the town, tourists will come across traces (his birthplace and a memorial bust in one of the squares) of another prominent Wolsztyn figure, Józef Hoehne Wroński, a philosopher, mathematician, lawyer and economist.

The Heritage Park will acquaint visitors with rural architecture of Western Wielkopolska. In the Steam Locomotive Shed they will see a real steam engine, which "stands and wheezes, and groans and gnashes." The exhibits like O149, still operating on passenger services, are unique in the country.

If you take a walk along 5 Stycznia Street, you will read further pages of Wolsztyn history, starting with the name of the street related to the Wielkopolskie Uprising, through commemorative plaques on the Post Office, the war cemetery, the post-Evangelical church, and finishing with Marcin Rożek Museum located at 34, 5 Stycznia St.

FOR ADULTS

Adult tourists can visit the Regional Museum, which includes Marcin Rożek Museum, Robert Koch Museum and the West Wielkopolska Folk Buildings Heritage Park.

Places to both contemplate and get familiar with the town history are Wolsztyn temples. The oldest one is the Parish Church of the Blessed Virgin Mary of the Immaculate Conception (in Kościelna Street) - a Late Baroque church ornamented with sculptures by Marcin Rożek's pupil, Edward Przymuszała. The rococo interior holds a monumental main altar with an image of Virgin Mary, decorated with a silver dress and crowned with a huge crown forming a canopy. Another temple, a former Evangelical Church, now the Catholic church of the Lord Ascension (in 5 Stycznia Street), was built according to the design of a famous Prussian architect, Karl Friedrich Schinkel. Still another attention grabbing example of religious architecture is the Immaculate Conception Chapel (in 29 Poznańska Street) with impressive stained glass windows depicting the Crucifixion of Jesus Christ.

Walking round Wolsztyn, it is impossible to miss the town's greatest attraction - the Steam Locomotive Shed. Apart from having a look at a chugging steam engine, it is worth getting acquainted with the whole technical background of the roundhouse: holding tracks for eight steam engines, a turntable or a storage base. An obligatory point is a ride in a vintage passenger carriage pulled by the Wolsztyn-based steam engine O149. The rides can be arranged with PKP Cargo (the

A walk along the town's streets may have both a relaxing and educational character. In 5 Stycznia Street, visitors will see a Monument of the Sacred Heart of Jesus, a war cemetery, and a stylish old villa of the district governor. In Kościelna Street, building no 9 holds a memorial plaque of Józef Maria Hoehne Wroński, who was born here. In the Market, tourists will find a statue of the Wielkopolskie Uprising Insurgent and a statue commemorating the friendship of Wolsztyn and the former Dutch commune of Maasbree (today, Peel en Maas) in the shape of two tangled ropes. Further on, visitors might notice the town crest of Wolsztyn, depicting Virgin Mary with Child, located in the triangular fronton of the Town Hall. From the Market, it is worth going towards Klemens Modliński Promenade, which will take you along the shore of Wolsztyńskie Lake to the Municipal Park. In the park, apart from the Mycielski Palace, you will find replicas of Marcin Rożek's sculptures, located on one of the oaks, and another statue with a treble clef, which stands for Polish-Dutch friendship.

If you leave the park in the south, a stately building will attract your attention. It is a former orphanage, founded in 1926 by father Benedykt Tomiak from Tłoki village, who took pastoral care of Poles in the United States. After the war, the orphanage was transformed into Lower Seminary. In the 60s of the 20th century, the building was taken over by the state authorities and changed into medical clinics. Since 2011, the Congregation of the Sisters of Mercy has been running a nursery school there.

The square in front of the former orphanage bears the name of father Teodor Lerch, a former director of the Lower Seminary.

If you walk along Wschowska Street, you will get to Kościuszki Square, where you will find the statue of Our Lady Queen of Poland.

If you travel beyond Wolsztyn, it is worth visiting Obra to see the church and the post-Cistercian monastery, which today belong to the Congregation of the Missionary Oblates of Mary Immaculate. In other commune villages such as Chorzemin, Gościeszyn and Wroniawy, despite time passing and noticeable damage, tourists can admire still beautiful park and palace complexes.
